A MCMDCV

It was the last day of school. It was also going to be the most important day in Max's life. If his plan worked, Max wouldn't be "Maxie the Geek" or "Goof of the Week" ever again. Best of all, Roxanne, the girl Max was crazy about, would pay attention to him at last.

Only one more hour until the school assembly. Max would make sure the last assembly was wild!

When the assembly began, Max was backstage dressed up to look like Powerline, the biggest rock star on the planet. While Max danced and lip-synched one of Powerline's hottest songs backstage, his friend PJ taped Max with a camcorder.

The school's audiovisual wizard had figured out how to project Max's image onto the big screen in the auditorium. The kids in the audience loved the show. Principal Mazur was not amused.

The principal ordered Max and his pals to his office. While they waited, Roxanne happened to come by.

"Your show was great," she told Max.

Max pumped up his courage and asked Roxanne to a party that was a week away. It was a party to watch a live Powerline concert televised from Los Angeles. Roxanne said she would go!

Goofy, Max's father, was busy with his job at the department store photo studio that morning when the school principal called.

"Mr. Goof, Max caused a riot at school today!" said the principal angrily. "If you don't make sure he changes his ways, your son will end up in jail."

Goofy was shocked. How could he help Max?

By the time Max came home from school, his father had loaded up the car. "Maxie, we haven't spent enough time together lately," said Goofy. "We're going to Lake Destiny, Idaho. That's where my dad took me fishing when I was a boy."

Max's heart sank.

Max rushed to Roxanne's house before he left. He had to tell her he couldn't take her to the party. "I understand. I—I'm sure I can find someone else!" said Roxanne.

Max panicked. He had to keep Roxanne interested. So he told her that he and his dad were going to the concert in L.A. "My dad knows Powerline, and during the concert, when we're onstage, I'll wave to you!" Max said quickly.

"Ahyuck!" Goofy laughed his goofy laugh and turned his camcorder on Max. "Say hi to the guys," Goofy said to his son.

Max didn't say hi. He refused to say anything. It was the dumbest vacation of his life, and he worried about the lie he'd told Roxanne.

The vacation began, but Max was miserable. On the way to Lake Destiny, they stopped to camp. Goofy's neighbor Pete happened to see Goofy's car and pulled his gigantic recreational vehicle into the same place. Pete and his son PJ were going camping together, too.

That afternoon Goofy dragged Max off to practice fishing. First he showed him the Goof family formula for the Perfect Cast.

Goofy twisted and danced with the fishing rod and said, "Ten o'clock, two o'clock, tour jeté, pas de deux, I'm a little teapot, let her fly!"

The fishing line sailed across the lake. When Goofy reeled it in, both he and Max were surprised to see that the legendary Bigfoot was the catch of the day.

Bigfoot stomped through the campground and chased Goofy and Max to the car, where they were trapped all night.

Max felt worse than ever. All he could think about was getting to the concert in Los Angeles.

He sat in the car and stared at the map they were using. Then, while Goofy slept, Max redrew the route. The new destination was California. Max knew the map wouldn't fool his father for long, but he had to try.

The next morning Bigfoot left the campground, and Goofy and Max continued their trip.

As it turned out, Goofy never looked at the map after that. He named Max the Official Navigator, and the two of them began having fun and stopped wherever they wanted.

They sang at the top of their lungs . . .

grabbed a foul ball at a ballpark . . .

and even entered a pie-eating contest.

They ran into Pete and PJ again one night when they stopped at a place called the Neptune Motel. As Pete and Goofy sat together in the motel hot tub, Pete said, "Goof, I gotta tell you something. I overheard your Max tell my PJ that he changed the map on you. You're headin' for L.A.!"

Goofy didn't believe Max would lie to him, but he kept thinking about what Pete had said. Finally he made up his mind to check the map.

"Gawrah, Pete's right!" said poor Goofy when he saw that Max's new route was taking them to Los Angeles instead of Lake Destiny.

The next day Goofy drove down the highway with Max as though nothing had happened. Soon they came to a major split in the road. If they went to the left, they would be heading for California, not Idaho. Goofy knew it, and so did Max.

"Which way, son?" said Goofy. "Left or right?"

Max hesitated. "Left!" he shouted at last.

Goofy was so upset he stopped the car and got out. "I trusted you, Max!" he yelled.

"Dad, the car!" Max shouted. The car was coasting down a steep canyon drive.

The car plunged into a roaring river at the bottom of the canyon. Goofy and Max jumped in after the car and had to climb onto the roof to stay above water. As they spun wildly through the rapids, father and son shouted at each other.

"I know all about your trouble at school!" yelled Goofy. "I was just trying to help."

"I've got my own life now!" Max shouted back. "You can't live it for me."

By the time the car reached calm water, Goofy and Max were calmer, too. Max had apologized to Goofy for changing the map and told him the whole story . . . about Roxanne and lying to her about the concert.

"Gawrsh, my Maxie's in love!" said Goofy. "You are growing up!" Then he began planning how to get Max to the Powerline concert.

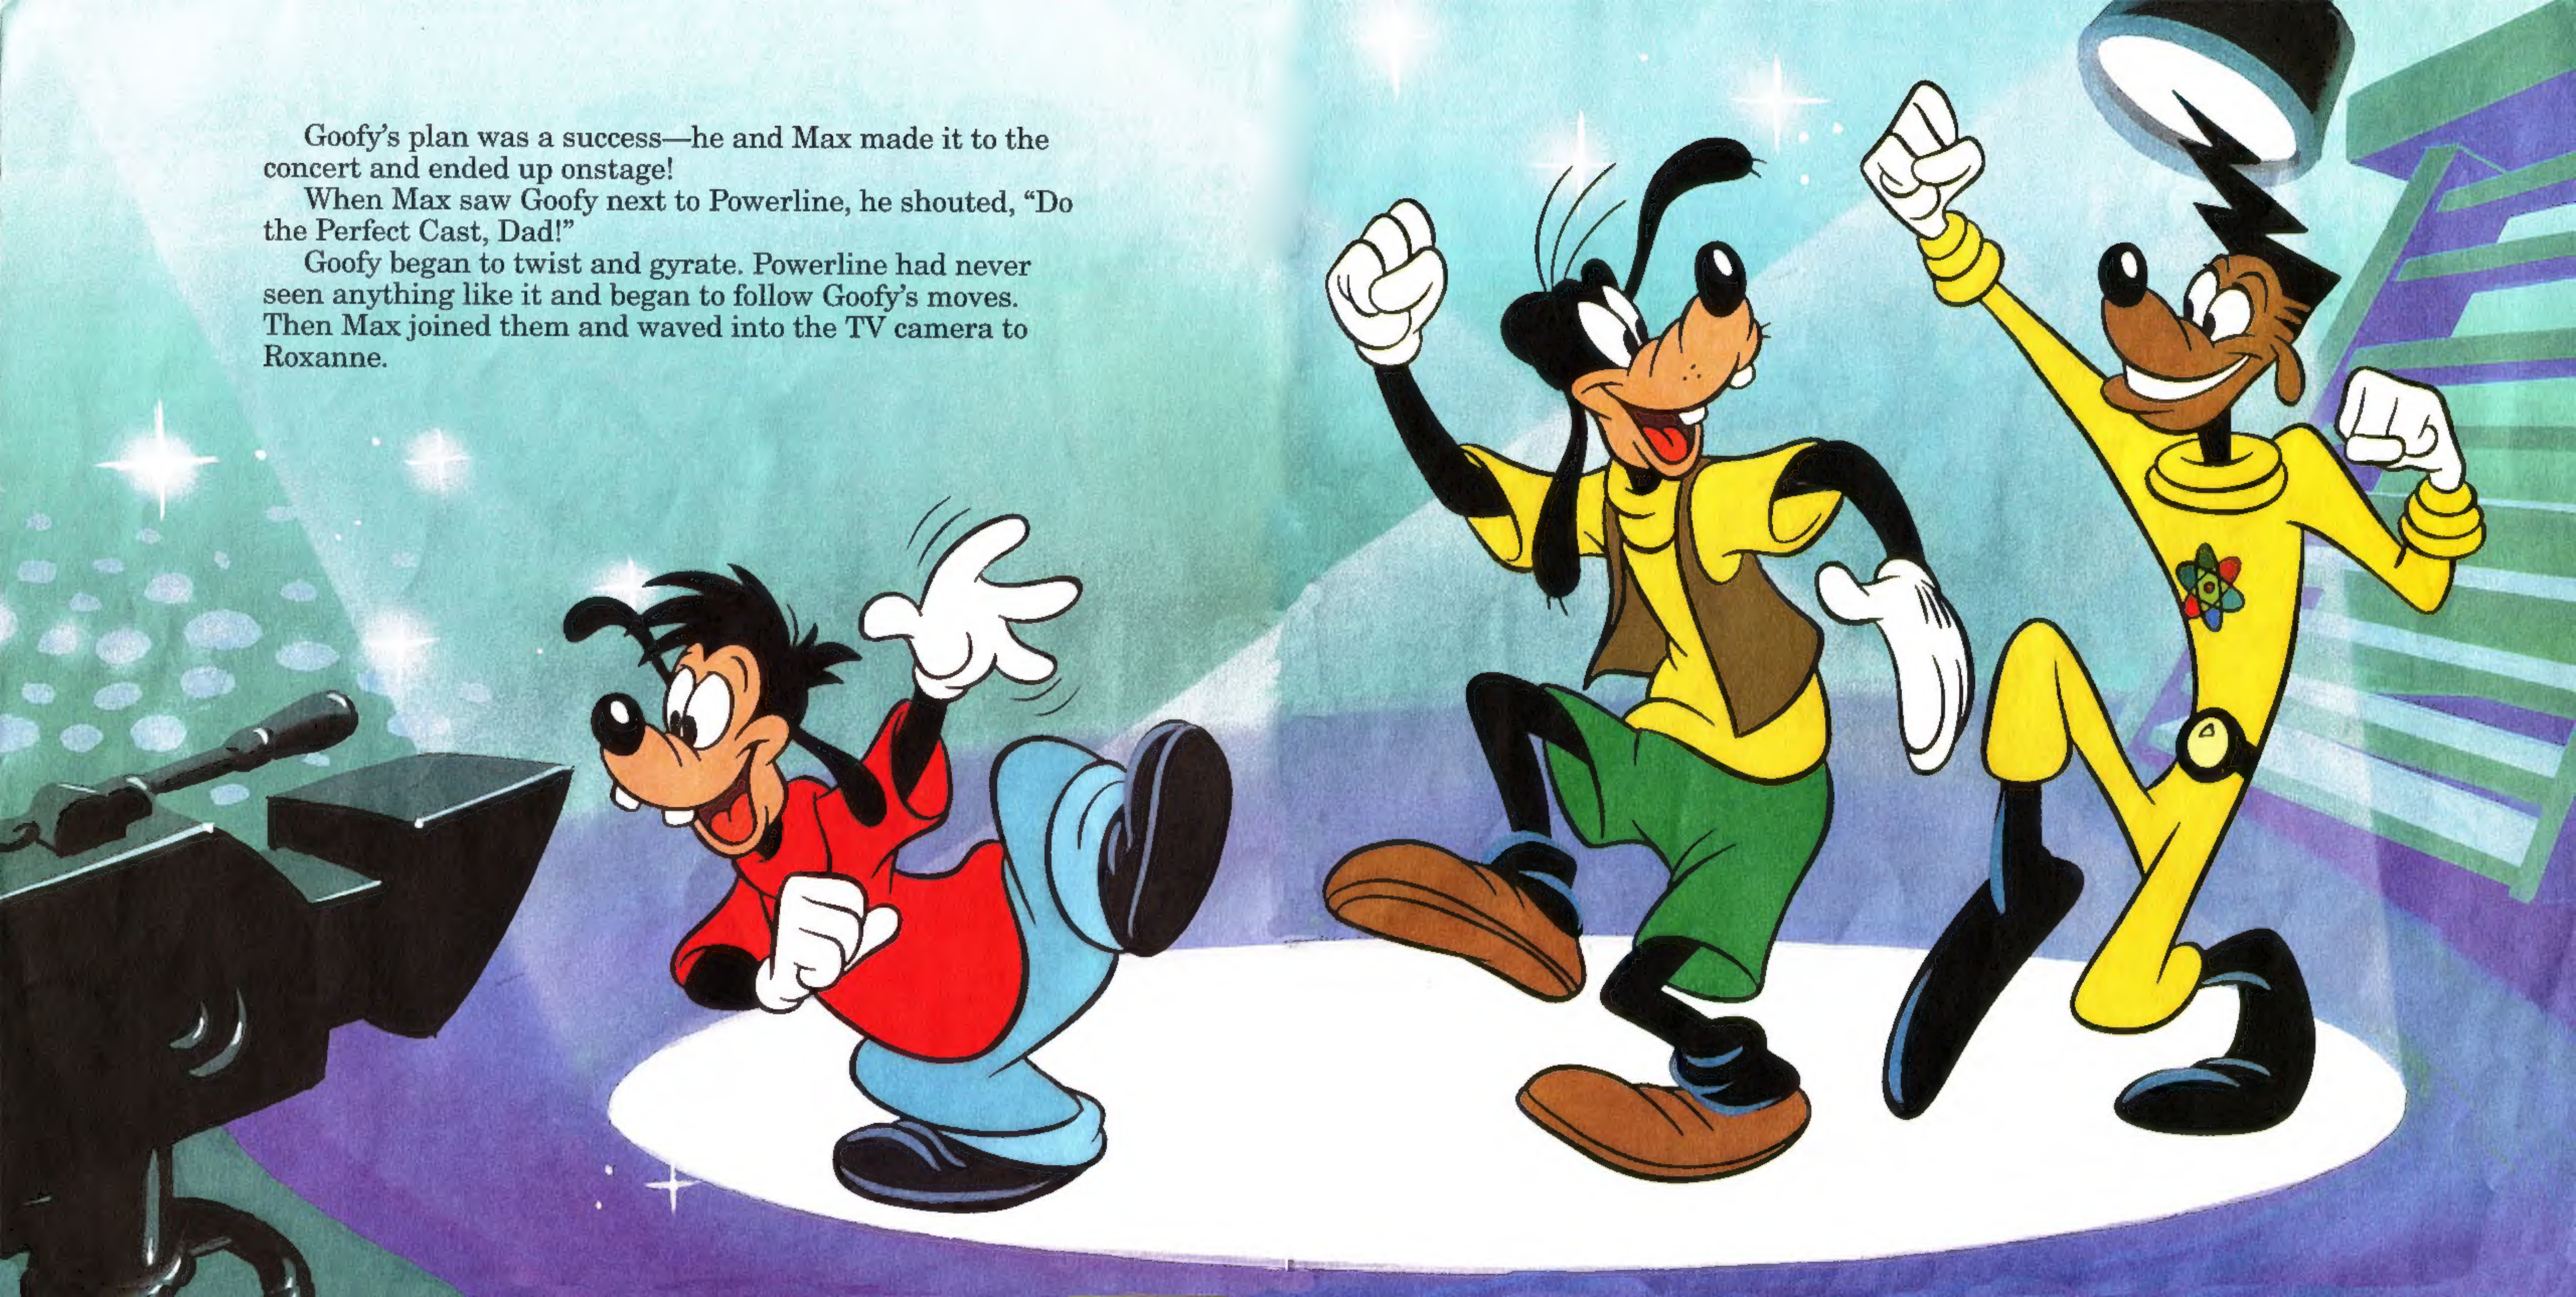

Goofy's plan was a success—he and Max made it to the concert and ended up onstage!

When Max saw Goofy next to Powerline, he shouted, "Do the Perfect Cast, Dad!"

Goofy began to twist and gyrate. Powerline had never seen anything like it and began to follow Goofy's moves. Then Max joined them and waved into the TV camera to Roxanne.

After the concert Goofy and Max drove home as fast as possible. Then Max proudly introduced his father to Roxanne.

"It looks like you two had a pretty good trip,"

Roxanne said.

"The best!" replied Goofy.

Then Max did something he couldn't believe he would ever do: He agreed with his father!
